

Attract Birds with the Right Feeders

Drs. Foster & Smith Educational Staff

Whether the species of birds you desire are native to your area, or migrating through, you can increase your chances of attracting them for a short or extended stay by providing the right feed, in the right feeder, installed in the right place.

Many homeowners put out a single feeder with a standard seed mix, only to be disappointed with the results. What they do not understand is that various species of birds prefer different foods, feed at different heights, and from different types of feeders. So if you want to cater to the needs of several species, you will likely need two or more feeders, possibly of different designs, mounted at different heights. And by providing a variety of foods, you will significantly increase your chance of attracting many different species of birds.

Here are a few tips to attracting more birds to your feeders:

- Any time of year is right for setting up and maintaining feeders for local birds, even winter.
- Having the right feeders and food in place in advance of the arrival of migrating birds.
- Place feeders close to cover such as a dense bush. Many birds will avoid feeders that don't offer protection in close proximity.
- Read up on the favorite treats of the birds you desire, and have them on hand.

- Clean your feeders and the area around them frequently. Spillage on the ground from poorly designed feeders is unattractive, and it can attract rodents. Make sure your seed feeders have effective seed catcher trays and clean up around them as needed.
- To attract birds to a new feeder, scatter a small amount of seed at the base of the feeder and sprinkle some directly on the feeder.
